JUNE 2018

FRIDAY, JUNE 22ND

"A History of Blood and Gunpowder Beneath the Maine Pines"

7:00 PM

Michael Dekker, local historian, describes the dark and tragic wars from 1675 to 1759 between Native American and European communities who were both trying to stake and defend their land claims from the Penobscot to the Piscataqua Rivers, including here in this area. These conflicts laid the foundation of Maine.

JULY 2018

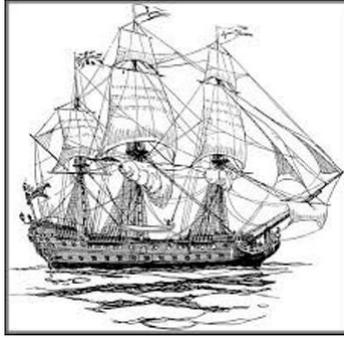

Saturday, July 7th

"Capt. Joseph C. Hopkins Who Sailed
the High Seas"

7:00 PM

Held at the Newcastle Fire Station Community Room on River Road

This program is part of the Newcastle Historical Society's programs. If you missed it last year, be sure to see it this summer.

Carolyn Hardman, Maine history teacher, tells about Nobleboro's Capt. Joseph Hopkins who captained ocean ships at the height of Maine's wooden ship era in 1800s and made 17 voyages to the far reaches of the oceans. He kept journals that tell of the adventures before he returned to the Mills and his wife and the rural life.

JULY & AUGUST 2018

SEPTEMBER 2018

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 14TH

"The Fiercely Independent Scot Irish Settled on Lincoln County Coast"
7:00 PM

Chip Griffin, local historian, will talk about the pugnacious Scottish families who had moved to Northern Ireland and then, starting in 1730, were pushed and pulled to America for the cheap land. These hardworking and fierce Protestants were attractive to the colonial authorities who settled them as a buffer between the existing settlements and the increasingly warlike native people. These people settled the region and did great deeds of piety and bravery, but in their own assertive way.

This program is co-sponsored by the Damariscotta Historical Society

Friday, October 19th

“How the Kavanagh Apple from Ireland was Part of the History of Damariscotta Mills”

7:00 PM

John Bunker, Maine's 'Apple Man', recently completed a book telling the story of how various apples were present to 'observe' the history of Maine. James Kavanagh and the Kavanagh apple, arriving here in the 1790s along with Matthew Cottrill, were part of that history of expanding the economy in the Mills, starting Nobleboro's ship building and alewives harvesting. These Irish Catholics from western Ireland had a lasting influence in Maine.

Bunker learned about the Kavanagh variety from a retired agriculture professor from the University of Maine, the late George Dow, who had found an old tree, much diminished, in Nobleboro and was eager to share it with Bunker.

It was John Bunker who in the 1990s took scion wood from a Kavanagh tree in Freeport and the other that remained in Nobleboro and grafted it into the baby Kavanaghs that Fedco has sold, on and off, since 1997. John Bunker is not related to James Kavanagh, but through him, the Kavanagh line lives on.

NOVEMBER 2018

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 13TH	“The 225 Years of History at Nobleboro’s First Baptist Church” 7:00 PM
Held at the First Baptist Church of Nobleboro, Back Meadow Road	This program is part of the First Baptist Church of Nobleboro’s “County Conversations” and is co-sponsored by Nobleboro Historical Society
	This year, the First Baptist Church of Nobleboro celebrates its quasiquibicentennial anniversary. Highlights of 225 years of Nobleboro history will be retold by storytellers at this event. Mary Sheldon , Nobleboro Historical Society president , will interview actors portraying the Rev. Phineas Pillsbury , the first pastor and Sarah Lincoln Chapman, one of the founders of the congregation.

Stories and conversation will bring to life historical events such as early Colonial life in the Maine territory, the movement to prohibit the use of alcohol, as well as the involvement of women in local history.

This storytelling evening is the final event of a slate of special public events that have taken place since May to celebrate the anniversary of the First Baptist Church, founded in 1793, as the " Church of Christ in Nobleborough."

This event is the second installment for the 2018-2019 season of County Conversations, an entertaining series of lectures and conversations on topics of interest to residents of Lincoln County. These events take place on the second Tuesday of each month from October 2018 through April 2019. They are held at the First Baptist Church.

The event is free and open to the public and the talk is followed by questions.

The First Baptist Church is located at the corner of Back Meadow Road and Center Street across the street from the former Grange Hall. The meeting is free and open to all.
